T Gallore ICP

Alex – Ambitious & Anxious

Alex is a 21-year-old guy stuck in that confusing, frustrating phase of life where he's old enough to know he doesn't want the typical 9-to-5 grind, but young enough to feel like he still hasn't figured out how to break free.

Every morning, he wakes up with this restless energy inside — a hunger to do more, to make his mark, to prove to himself and the people around him that he's not just "average." But at the same time, he feels a heavy weight of anxiety pushing down on him. What if he fails? What if all this trying is just a waste of time?

For months, he's been chasing that dream of financial freedom, picturing himself living on his own terms — trading from a laptop in some cool city or beach town, driving nice cars, and having the freedom to take care of his family without stress. He's seen the Instagram reels, TikToks, YouTube videos — young millionaires flashing their Lambos, cash stacks, and private jets. Deep down, he wants that too. But those images also make him question himself. Why am I not there yet? Am I just missing something?

He's tried to learn trading on his own. Countless late nights watching free videos, trying to copy strategies, downloading random PDFs, lurking in online forums, and reading posts from traders who sound like they've "made it." Sometimes he thinks he's getting it — a few small wins here and there — but then the market turns, he loses more than he wants, and the hope crumbles again.

Some days he's full of motivation. He sets alarms early, opens his charts, takes notes, and feels like he's got a plan. But inevitably, the doubt creeps in. The fear that maybe he's not cut out for this, or maybe the success stories online are all fake. He tries to fight it with more hustle — grinding harder, watching more tutorials, jumping on more live streams.

At times, Alex has even bought a few courses. Maybe one or two that promised the secret formula to trading success. But after paying hundreds or thousands of dollars, he's left feeling more confused than before. The content feels overwhelming, or too complicated, or just not realistic for someone like him. Sometimes the "mentors" vanish after the sale, leaving him to figure it all out alone. Other times, the community is toxic or unhelpful, which just chips away at his confidence.

For those who never took the plunge to buy, it's mostly because trust is a huge problem for Alex. The internet is flooded with scammers and "gurus" who promise everything but deliver nothing. Every glowing testimonial could be fake. Every flashy ad might just be an illusion. And so he hesitates, caught between wanting to change and not knowing who to believe.

This lack of trust feeds his anxiety. It feels like every choice is a gamble — and if he bets wrong, it could cost him time, money, and his already fragile confidence. He's scared to take the leap, but also terrified of staying stuck forever.

Outside of trading, Alex's life feels a bit chaotic too. He's juggling school or maybe a part-time job, trying to manage relationships with family and friends who don't fully get why he's so obsessed with "this trading thing." They tell him to get a real job, "be realistic," or just settle down. But he can't settle — not when there's this voice inside him screaming that there's more.

Some nights, Alex stays up late scrolling through social media, watching stories of people his age making bank trading, launching side hustles, or traveling the world. It's inspiring, but also painful. It reminds him of how far behind he feels, and it makes him question his own progress. That mix of envy and hope is exhausting.

Alex battles with his own emotions daily. His confidence is a rollercoaster — soaring high when he thinks he's cracked the code, and crashing hard when a losing streak hits. He can get frustrated and impatient with himself. Sometimes he gets so overwhelmed he zones out or procrastinates, telling himself he'll start fresh tomorrow.

Despite all this, he's desperately determined. He's not ready to give up. He tells himself over and over, "Just one more try," or "I'm one strategy away from making it work." That relentless hope is what keeps him going.

What Alex really wants is clarity and guidance — a mentor who understands his struggles, can show him exactly what to do step-by-step, and can hold him accountable through the messy, frustrating parts. He wants proof that success is possible — not just flashy cars or big numbers, but real, steady progress that builds his confidence and changes his life.

Alex doesn't want to be sold to. He wants real talk, no fluff, no hype. He wants to be part of a community that supports him without judgment.

Because if he can find that — if he can find someone who gets him and can guide him — Alex believes he can finally break the cycle of doubt, frustration, and burnout. He can finally build the kind of life where he wakes up with excitement instead of dread, and trading becomes not just a dream, but his reality.

1. Trauma

- Felt overlooked and average growing up; never "special."
- Frustrated with traditional education and life path (school → job → debt → stress).
- Experienced loss of confidence from failed attempts at trading or investing.

2. Obstacles / Problems

- Lack of clear guidance in trading — overwhelmed by misinformation.
- Trust issues due to past course scams and shady “gurus.”
- Emotional rollercoaster of hope and doubt, causing inconsistent progress.
- Pressure from family/friends to choose “stable” paths.
- Difficulty balancing trading learning with work/school/family.

3. Age

- 19 to 24, early adulthood, at a crossroads in life.

4. Doubts

- Am I good enough?
- Are trading success stories real or scams?

- Can I really escape the 9-to-5 grind?
- Will I waste time and money again?

5. Goals

- Achieve financial freedom through trading.
- Consistently make $1,000+ days, then $10k+ per month.
- Build a lifestyle with freedom, travel, and luxury.
- Support family financially without stress.

6. Fears

- Fear of failure and losing money.
- Fear of being stuck forever in a dead-end job.
- Fear of wasting time on bad advice.
- Fear of never truly trusting oneself or others again.

7. Insecurities

- Feeling “average” or “behind” peers who seem to be winning.
- Lack of confidence after repeated failures.
- Self-doubt about intelligence and discipline.

8. Vices / Addictions

- Scrolling social media for motivation but getting distracted.
- Chasing “shiny object syndrome” with new strategies or courses.
- Occasional procrastination or avoidance when overwhelmed.

9. Thinks About

- How to break free financially.
- How others made it and whether it’s possible for him.

- What the next right step is.
- Balancing hustle with mental health.

10. Beliefs

- Trading is a legitimate path but requires real work.
- Most “gurus” are scams, but some genuine help exists.
- Financial freedom is achievable with the right system.

11. Identity

- Split between “average guy” and “ambitious entrepreneur.”
- Not fully committed yet but desperate to become successful.

- Views himself as a learner, hustler, and hopeful dreamer.

12. Emotional Patterns

- High motivation spikes after inspiration.
- Crippling self-doubt and anxiety cycles.
- Frustration leading to quitting, then restarting.
- Desire for control and certainty.

13. Resentments

- Resents societal pressure to follow traditional career paths.
- Resents failed courses and wasted money.
- Resents friends/family who don’t understand his goals.

14. Role Models

- Young successful traders and entrepreneurs on social media.
- Mentors who show real results and no BS.

15. Media

- Instagram, TikTok, YouTube (trading content, motivational videos).
- Trading forums and Discord groups & Whops

16. Platforms

- Trading apps (e.g., Thinkorswim, TradingView).
- Social media for learning and community.

17. Routines / Habits

- Late nights researching and practicing trading.

- Checking charts daily.
- Scrolling social media for motivation and tactics.
- Inconsistent journaling or habit tracking.

18. Family / Relationships

- Family expects “stable” career, causing friction.
- Wants to support family financially.
- Friends often don’t get or support his trading dreams.

19. Purchases

- Bought 1-2 trading courses or mentorships, some disappointing.
- Regularly invests in software, books, or tools to improve.

20. Health

- Mental stress from uncertainty and pressure.
- Possible irregular sleep due to late-night trading research.

21. Traits

- Ambitious, hardworking, and hungry.

- Anxious, self-critical, and impatient.
- Curious and open to learning but skeptical.

22. Values

- Freedom (time, financial, personal).
- Authenticity — hates fake hype and BS.
- Growth and self-improvement.
- Responsibility toward family.

23. Education

- Possibly some college or high school.
- Feels traditional education didn’t prepare him for real life.

24. Social Life

- Limited understanding/support for trading from friends.
- Online trading communities are his main “tribe.”

25. Hobbies

- Trading and market analysis.
- Watching motivational content.
- Possibly gaming or social media.

26. Work Experience

- Part-time jobs or low-paying gigs to pay bills.
- May have tried other side hustles.

27. Finances

- Limited disposable income — cautious about spending on courses.
- May have debt or financial pressure from family obligations.